

CLEAN STREETS COSTLY

WOULD SAVE HIS BROTHER
Man Confesses Crime of Which Other Was Convicted.

On This Ground "Big Bill" Edwards Defends White Wings.

NEEDS MEN AND MACHINES

Suggests That Critics Complain to Board of Estimate, Which Refuses to Aid Him.

They heckled "Bill" Edwards, Commissioner of Street Cleaning, during the discussion on "A Clean CITY" at the City Club yesterday afternoon. Dr. Henry Moskowitz, of the Downtown Ethical Society, wanted to know what was the matter with street cleaning on the lower East Side. Joseph M. Price, chairman of the City Club's committee on streets, and the presiding officer, criticized street flushing by "machines." In the midst of it all "Big Bill" got the floor.

"I feel now just as I used to feel at the opening of the second half with the score all against us, and believe me, I never liked a better time than that," he said: "It is easy enough to find fault with the streets. I can do that much myself, but I am here this afternoon to tell you honestly the conditions that I am working under, and to bear testimony in behalf of one of the grandest departments in our city, and one that is doing the hardest kind of work under conditions that are twenty years behind the times, and in face of the fact that the head of the Street Cleaning Department has his hands tied by the Board of Estimate, which practically refuses to appropriate enough money to allow him to make good his suggestions. And I can tell you, my friends, it isn't worth while to be at the head of the Street Cleaning Department if your hands are tied."

The Commissioner spent half an hour telling how he was hampered by lack of money, men and modern equipment. He would like to flush the streets, of course, but where could he get the water? The city couldn't afford it. Certainly he would like to put a hundred more sweepers down in the East Side streets, but the Board of Estimate denied him the money. Commissioner Thompson of the Water Department told him that New York was facing a serious water famine, and there you had it.

"Meetings of good men and women like this don't amount to that, when you come right down to it," said the Commissioner with a snap of his fingers. "You could put in your time to better advantage appearing for a single hour before the Board of Estimate when street cleaning budgets are being made," he said. Then he uncovered the lumpy system of paying off his men, which resulted often in a loss of two hours work on their part. "Ridiculous," he said. He confessed with deep feeling that he was slow to lay off "superannuated" cleaners, because there was no pension system in vogue in the Street Cleaning Department. He paid a fine tribute to the loyalty and industry of his men, and he insisted that they deserved pensions as much as policemen and firemen.

He believed with Mayor Gaynor that too much snow was removed from the streets, and in reply to Dr. Moskowitz, who said that he always got the "grit" when the snow and slush lay on the ground, he quoted Dr. Ernest J. Lederer, Health Commissioner, who telegraphed Mayor Gaynor recently that the death rate in New York had been lower this winter than in years. "I would be disloyal to my men if I did not tell you that they deserve some credit for this," he said.

Chairman Price, following Commissioners Edwards, said that the Street Cleaning Department might get more money if the Commissioner could show that the equipment and methods he suggested would save money. The discussion was ended by Professor William F. Moran, an expert in sanitation, who urged New York to establish disposing plants and take away the profits of the private corporations now doing that enormous work."

CHILDREN TO SCATTER ASHES

Will of John Heissenberger Makes Request, Not Command.

John Heissenberger, who died February 5 at No. 45 East 14th street, left unusual instructions for the disposition of his body. His will, which was filed in the Surrogate's office yesterday, showing his estate to be valued at $15,000, contained the following paragraph:

"I hereby direct that my remains be cremated, for the reason that I am a member of the Manhattan Cremation and Funeral Society, of Middle Village, Queens County, my ashes to be strewn by my children over farm lands at least fifty miles from New York or any other large city. But should my children desire a different disposition of my ashes their wishes shall be granted."

NOTABLE OFFERINGS AT THE STORES

For Further Details Consult the Advertisements in To-day's Tribune.

MACY'S, Broadway, between 24th and 25th streets, lays stress this week on a sale of coats, suits and dresses, women's gloves, petticoats, children's coats, silk corsets, waists and robes. Spring and summer rugs, straw matting, table linens and towels and furniture are other attractions to be offered at reasonable prices.

HEARN, West 14th street, announces an annual spring sale of satin foulards, broadcloths, women's suits, waists, corsets, girls' dresses, couch covers, curtains, babies' caps and an assortment of rugs. Other bargains to be offered are women's cloaks and wraps, silks and parasols.

LORD & TAYLOR, Broadway and 20th street, Fifth Avenue and 19th street, announce an important sale of Oriental carpets and rugs, at extraordinary prices. Special values will be offered in women's suits and coats, waists and millinery.

SIMPSON - CRAWFORD COMPANY, Sixth avenue, between 18th and 20th streets, will have an exhibition on living models of gowns, suits, the harem skirt and Paris millinery on Tuesday and Wednesday, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

BONWIT, TELLER & CO., Nos. 54 and 55 West 23rd street, have prepared for this week sales in women's and misses' suits, dresses, coats, waists and millinery, at correct prices.

R. J. HORNER & CO., West 23rd street, advertises a sale of furniture for town and country homes.

ARNOLD, CONSTABLE & CO., Broadway and 18th street, are making a special showing of their importations of wraps in varied designs and materials. Many desirable wash fabrics and an extensive display of Parisian dress silks are also announced.

MAGNUS—Experienced dry-goods commission business must know accounting; $2,000. Mighill (Agency), Flatiron Building.

MME. JACQUIN, 607 6th ave., near 35th street, French maid, servants, all nationalities; room and board; all capacities wanted; city; country; call early.

MISS CURRY, AGENCY

For excellent Domestic Male and Female Help.

TOO LATE FOR CLASSIFICATION.

BOOKKEEPER for manufacturing office, experienced double entry; office details; $20. Mighill (Agency), Flatiron Building.

CASHIER & payroll clerk, publishing business; must know accounting; $15. Mighill (Agency), Flatiron Building.

CORRESPONDENT—Sales manager experienced canvas selling; salary $1,500. Mighill (Agency), Flatiron Building.

MAGAZINE—Experienced dry-goods commission business must know accounting; $2,000. Mighill (Agency), Flatiron Building.

MME. JACQUIN, 607 6th ave., near 35th street, French maid, servants, all nationalities; room and board; all capacities wanted; city; country; call early.

TECHNICAL COLLEGE GRADUATE—Work as assistant superintendent; salary $20. Mighill (Agency), Flatiron Building.

WANTED—Active business partner in old established theater and concert agency. Desires $5,000. Paid for on year as trial; salary guaranteed, $125 weekly, with liberal profit share. Letters, proprietor, 147 East 15th street.

PLAN 'UNBOSS'D' CAUCUS

Murphy and Upstate Leaders Hold Secret Conferences.

DIX "HOPES FOR A CHANGE"

Cohalan or Herrick Might Be Chosen if Insurgents Would Agree To Be Bound.

Charles F. Murphy has hit on a fine plan to draw the insurgents into another caucus which shall be known as an "unbossed" caucus. It was said yesterday, and then to pledge them to William F. Sheehan or to whatever candidate he and the interests may decide will be acceptable in view of Mr. Sheehan.

So far Mr. Sheehan has not consented to eliminate himself, even to the extent of saying that he will relinquish his personal hold on a score or so of upstate legislators. If he should later decide to yield to the great pressure being brought to bear on him, a secret understanding could be reached with Murphy whereby a sufficient number of the Senators and Assemblymen would vote for and elect another candidate. Mr. Murphy and his advisers were keeping quiet about this because if it were known that a Murphy man was to be chosen, even with Mr. Sheehan eliminated, the insurgents would never consent to allow a second caucus to bind them.

Charles F. Murphy called on Governor Dix the Waldorf soon after noon yesterday. They talked over the senatorial muddle for an hour. Afterward the Governor said what he has said every week for some time—that the situation seemed to be crystallizing and that he hoped for a change next week.

Mr. Murphy had nothing to say. He said he had told a friend, however, that things were much as they had been for some time.

The hope of breaking the deadlock rests on the ability of the regulars to induce the insurgents to enter a new caucus. So far they have steadfastly refused, except on the distinct understanding that Mr. Sheehan be eliminated and that they may establish a blacklist, from which candidates should not be chosen. This, of course, Mr. Murphy refused to agree to.

Speaker Frisbie Talks.

Daniel F. Frisbie, Speaker of the Assembly, had a talk with Mr. Murphy yesterday. He said he expressed his mind to the "boss" as he had at Albany for two days past. "I told him," he said, "that there was a growing demand from an overwhelming majority of people upstate that the deadlock be ended and that a Senator be elected before April 4. If Congress should meet without a Democratic representative from this state in the Senate it would go hard with our organization for a long time."

Speaker Frisbie said he did not think some of the members of the Legislature would stand for Mr. Sheehan much longer. Some heralded this as an indication that the Speaker had broken away from Murphy. Those who know him simply smiled and said it was a part of the fine game being played to make it appear that members of the Legislature had broken away from the Murphy dictation, and would be free and untrammeled in case another caucus was called. Speaker Frisbie once his selection as presiding officer of the Assembly to Mr. Murphy, and is not likely to forget it.

It ought to be easy for Murphy to have what would seem on the surface to be an "unbossed" caucus. The Tammany vote might be split on the first and second ballots, for instance, just to show they were unpledged to any one man, but so divided that no man could be selected as the caucus candidate. Then on the succeeding ballots the Murphy men could swing in and name the Murphy candidate.

Some of the insurgents were said to have given their unqualified approval to the "unbossed" caucus proposition, but others were not so anxious to make an agreement they might regret later.

The Second Caucus Plan.

It was said that the second caucus plan provided that Mr. Sheehan appear before the caucus and address the members of the Legislature along the lines of the written address that he sent to them some time ago, in which he asserted he would be willing to abide by the result of a second caucus, no matter if another than he was chosen. He could not and would not withdraw, however, so long as he remained the choice of the party organization as determined by the first caucus.

To make such a statement before the members of the Legislature and then to take his chances of being chosen again or of preventing any other man being chosen was said to be as far as Mr. Sheehan was willing to go. There were those, however, who hoped to persuade him to agree to a plan by which there might be a secret understanding that he would not be named again.

Whatever may be done, Mr. Sheehan wants to preserve his dignity and Mr. Murphy wants to preserve his leadership. After it is all over, Mr. Murphy wants it understood that he was able, after all, to direct the election of a United States Senator, and did not allow a band of "deadlocking" legislators calling themselves insurgents to lead him about by the nose.

Mr. Murphy has been considering making Daniel F. Cohalan the candidate in case he succeeds in getting the insurgents into an "unbossed" caucus. It was said. The insurgents have said right along that they would not agree to vote for Mr. Cohalan, but if they went into the caucus with an agreement to vote for the choice of the caucus and it should happen that Mr. Cohalan was chosen they would have to support him. Mr. Murphy is confident that the record Mr. Cohalan would make if he went to the Second Caucus Plan.

It was said that the second caucus plan provided that Mr. Sheehan appear before the caucus and address the members of the Legislature along the lines of the written address that he sent to them some time ago, in which he asserted he would be willing to abide by the result of a second caucus, no matter if another than he was chosen. He could not and would not withdraw, however, so long as he remained the choice of the party organization as determined by the first caucus.

To make such a statement before the members of the Legislature and then to take his chances of being chosen again or of preventing any other man being chosen was said to be as far as Mr. Sheehan was willing to go. There were those, however, who hoped to persuade him to agree to a plan by which there might be a secret understanding that he would not be named again.

Whatever may be done, Mr. Sheehan wants to preserve his dignity and Mr. Murphy wants to preserve his leadership. After it is all over, Mr. Murphy wants it understood that he was able, after all, to direct the election of a United States Senator, and did not allow a band of "deadlocking" legislators calling themselves insurgents to lead him about by the nose.

Mr. Murphy has been considering making Daniel F. Cohalan the candidate in case he succeeds in getting the insurgents into an "unbossed" caucus. It was said. The insurgents have said right along that they would not agree to vote for Mr. Cohalan, but if they went into the caucus with an agreement to vote for the choice of the caucus and it should happen that Mr. Cohalan was chosen they would have to support him. Mr. Murphy is confident that the record Mr. Cohalan would make if he went to the Second Caucus Plan.

It was said that the second caucus plan provided that Mr. Sheehan appear before the caucus and address the members of the Legislature along the lines of the written address that he sent to them some time ago, in which he asserted he would be willing to abide by the result of a second caucus, no matter if another than he was chosen. He could not and would not withdraw, however, so long as he remained the choice of the party organization as determined by the first caucus.

To make such a statement before the members of the Legislature and then to take his chances of being chosen again or of preventing any other man being chosen was said to be as far as Mr. Sheehan was willing to go. There were those, however, who hoped to persuade him to agree to a plan by which there might be a secret understanding that he would not be named again.

Whatever may be done, Mr. Sheehan wants to preserve his dignity and Mr. Murphy wants to preserve his leadership. After it is all over, Mr. Murphy wants it understood that he was able, after all, to direct the election of a United States Senator, and did not allow a band of "deadlocking" legislators calling themselves insurgents to lead him about by the nose.

Mr. Murphy has been considering making Daniel F. Cohalan the candidate in case he succeeds in getting the insurgents into an "unbossed" caucus. It was said. The insurgents have said right along that they would not agree to vote for Mr. Cohalan, but if they went into the caucus with an agreement to vote for the choice of the caucus and it should happen that Mr. Cohalan was chosen they would have to support him. Mr. Murphy is confident that the record Mr. Cohalan would make if he went to the Second Caucus Plan.

It was said that the second caucus plan provided that Mr. Sheehan appear before the caucus and address the members of the Legislature along the lines of the written address that he sent to them some time ago, in which he asserted he would be willing to abide by the result of a second caucus, no matter if another than he was chosen. He could not and would not withdraw, however, so long as he remained the choice of the party organization as determined by the first caucus.

To make such a statement before the members of the Legislature and then to take his chances of being chosen again or of preventing any other man being chosen was said to be as far as Mr. Sheehan was willing to go. There were those, however, who hoped to persuade him to agree to a plan by which there might be a secret understanding that he would not be named again.

Whatever may be done, Mr. Sheehan wants to preserve his dignity and Mr. Murphy wants to preserve his leadership. After it is all over, Mr. Murphy wants it understood that he was able, after all, to direct the election of a United States Senator, and did not allow a band of "deadlocking" legislators calling themselves insurgents to lead him about by the nose.

Mr. Murphy has been considering making Daniel F. Cohalan the candidate in case he succeeds in getting the insurgents into an "unbossed" caucus. It was said. The insurgents have said right along that they would not agree to vote for Mr. Cohalan, but if they went into the caucus with an agreement to vote for the choice of the caucus and it should happen that Mr. Cohalan was chosen they would have to support him. Mr. Murphy is confident that the record Mr. Cohalan would make if he went to the Second Caucus Plan.

It was said that the second caucus plan provided that Mr. Sheehan appear before the caucus and address the members of the Legislature along the lines of the written address that he sent to them some time ago, in which he asserted he would be willing to abide by the result of a second caucus, no matter if another than he was chosen. He could not and would not withdraw, however, so long as he remained the choice of the party organization as determined by the first caucus.

To make such a statement before the members of the Legislature and then to take his chances of being chosen again or of preventing any other man being chosen was said to be as far as Mr. Sheehan was willing to go. There were those, however, who hoped to persuade him to agree to a plan by which there might be a secret understanding that he would not be named again.

Whatever may be done, Mr. Sheehan wants to preserve his dignity and Mr. Murphy wants to preserve his leadership. After it is all over, Mr. Murphy wants it understood that he was able, after all, to direct the election of a United States Senator, and did not allow a band of "deadlocking" legislators calling themselves insurgents to lead him about by the nose.

Mr. Murphy has been considering making Daniel F. Cohalan the candidate in case he succeeds in getting the insurgents into an "unbossed" caucus. It was said. The insurgents have said right along that they would not agree to vote for Mr. Cohalan, but if they went into the caucus with an agreement to vote for the choice of the caucus and it should happen that Mr. Cohalan was chosen they would have to support him. Mr. Murphy is confident that the record Mr. Cohalan would make if he went to the Second Caucus Plan.

It was said that the second caucus plan provided that Mr. Sheehan appear before the caucus and address the members of the Legislature along the lines of the written address that he sent to them some time ago, in which he asserted he would be willing to abide by the result of a second caucus, no matter if another than he was chosen. He could not and would not withdraw, however, so long as he remained the choice of the party organization as determined by the first caucus.

To make such a statement before the members of the Legislature and then to take his chances of being chosen again or of preventing any other man being chosen was said to be as far as Mr. Sheehan was willing to go. There were those, however, who hoped to persuade him to agree to a plan by which there might be a secret understanding that he would not be named again.

Whatever may be done, Mr. Sheehan wants to preserve his dignity and Mr. Murphy wants to preserve his leadership. After it is all over, Mr. Murphy wants it understood that he was able, after all, to direct the election of a United States Senator, and did not allow a band of "deadlocking" legislators calling themselves insurgents to lead him about by the nose.

Mr. Murphy has been considering making Daniel F. Cohalan the candidate in case he succeeds in getting the insurgents into an "unbossed" caucus. It was said. The insurgents have said right along that they would not agree to vote for Mr. Cohalan, but if they went into the caucus with an agreement to vote for the choice of the caucus and it should happen that Mr. Cohalan was chosen they would have to support him. Mr. Murphy is confident that the record Mr. Cohalan would make if he went to the Second Caucus Plan.

It was said that the second caucus plan provided that Mr. Sheehan appear before the caucus and address the members of the Legislature along the lines of the written address that he sent to them some time ago, in which he asserted he would be willing to abide by the result of a second caucus, no matter if another than he was chosen. He could not and would not withdraw, however, so long as he remained the choice of the party organization as determined by the first caucus.

To make such a statement before the members of the Legislature and then to take his chances of being chosen again or of preventing any other man being chosen was said to be as far as Mr. Sheehan was willing to go. There were those, however, who hoped to persuade him to agree to a plan by which there might be a secret understanding that he would